Jigglypuff meets Slenderman

How long was she in this forest again? Jigglypuff lost track after about an hour.

Jigglypuff decided on taking another trip through the multi-porter tonight. It was Halloween and she decided to get out of the lab for a while. Sadly she should've thought twice before she decided to just put in the area code by mashing at the buttons. Worse, her costume was back at home… well, her "costume" was actually a bucket of black fur dye and red contact lenses, but it still counts! And now she was in this fenced off wooded area in the middle of nowhere. Aside from trees, all that was there was a brick building made of nothing but run-down bathrooms, some trucks and tanks, a tunnel that leads nowhere, and a bunch of boulders. There wasn't a single sign of anyone there… except for these weird drawings and messages on loose-leaf paper she kept finding… and this eerie feeling that someone… or something… was following her.

Not too far away, there WAS something following Jigglypuff. It was a tall, lanky human-like figure in a black suit and tie. He had black tentacles coming out of his back, his skin was snow white, and he lacked a face. This was the creature that many came to know as Slenderman, a creature infamous for stealing away anyone that dared wandered into this forest. Slenderman had been following the little puffball for quite some time. It's amazing that Jigglypuff hasn't noticed him yet. Slenderman continued to follow the little Pokemon, until finally, she turned around. At that instant, Slenderman knew what would happen. Like all the others, she would scream, attempt to run away but find she can't, and he'd take care of the rest. However, Jigglypuff, much to his surprise, didn't run at all. Instead, her eyes widened in astonishment, and the ends of her mouth formed into a large smile. She wasn't scared at all. In fact, she looked as if she were HAPPY to see him! Why was this?

'Either this creature is incredibly brave or incredibly stupid,' Slenderman thought, his head cocked in confusion. Jigglypuff turned to face Slenderman with that same smile on her face, and did something that surprised him even more; she sang.

Slenderman kept looking at Jigglypuff in confusion as she sang her song. It was a light, gentle melody that seemed to quiet the rest of the area. The night had all of a sudden felt… peaceful… Suddenly, Slenderman began to feel strangely tired. If he had eyes, they'd certainly have started drooping at this point. His limbs began to feel heavy, and his tentacles were resting against his back. Finally, he slumped back, and everything became dark.

Jigglypuff soon finished her song, and her eyes opened again, eager to see if her audience enjoyed her singing. Instead, she found Slenderman slumped against a tree. His head was hung over, his arms were at his sides, and his chest was bobbing with each breath. Even without a face, Jigglypuff could tell right away that he had fallen asleep. She puffed up in anger, as usual, and uncapped the microphone to reveal the black marker. Then the thought came to her; this man didn't have a face! What should she draw on then?... Then, a mischievous grin came across her face, and she went to work.

A few hours had passed before Slenderman woke up. As his vision swam back into view, he saw that the little puffball was nowhere in sight. Where had it gone? He soon stood back up and continued patrolling the forest. Everywhere he looked, there was no sign of the puffball. How could it have gotten out?

Finally, he found himself back in the brick building, when he noticed his reflection in the mirror… and saw a poorly drawn face in black marker on the front of his head!
